

CHAPTER 4

PROVISION

Contingent asset and liability

TECHNICAL KNOWLEDGE

To understand the nature of a provision.

To know the conditions for the recognition of a provision.

To know the measurement of a provision.

To know the requirements for the recognition of contingent liability and contingent asset.

PROVISION

A provision is an existing liability of uncertain timing or amount.

The essence of a provision is that there is uncertainty about the timing or amount of the future expenditure. It is this uncertainty that distinguishes provisions from other liabilities.

The liability definitely exists at the end of reporting period but the amount is indefinite at the date when the obligation arises or the liability is recognised, and in some cases, the proper amount is identified or determined.

Recognition of provisions

A provision shall be recognised as a liability in the financial statements under the following conditions:

- The entity has a present obligation, legal or constructive, as a result of a past event.
- It is probable that an outflow of resources embodying economic benefits would be required to settle the obligation.
- The amount of the obligation can be measured reliably.

Present obligation

The present obligation may be legal or constructive.

A legal obligation is fairly clear. A legal obligation is an obligation arising from a contract, legislation or other operation of law.

A constructive obligation is an obligation that is derived from an entity's actions when:

- The entity has indicated to other parties that it will accept certain responsibilities by means of an established pattern of past practice, published policy, or a sufficiently specific current statement.
- And as a result, the entity has created a valid expectation on the part of other parties that it will discharge those responsibilities.
