

Journalism and Mass Communication

Unit I: Origin of Print Media

I. Definition of Journalism and Mass Communication

Journalism is the activity of gathering, creating and presenting news and information. The word Journalism was originally applied to the reportage of current events in printed form, specifically newspaper, but with the advent of Radio, TV and the internet in the 20th century the use of term broadened to include all printed and electronic communication dealing with current affairs.

The earliest knowing Journalistic product was a news sheet circulated in ancient Rome "The Acta Diruna" before 59 BC, recorded official business and matters of public interest. It constituted a type of daily gazette. It also recorded daily events such as public speeches. It was Published daily and hung in prominent places.

In China during the Tang Dynasty, a Court circular called "Bao" or "Report" was issued to Govt officials. It appeared in various forms under different names until 1911. The first regularly published newspaper appeared in German cities in 1609. The first English Newspaper "The Weekly News" was published in 1622. One of the first daily newspapers "The Daily Courant" appeared in 1702. At first hindered by Govt. imposed censorship, taxes and other restrictions. Newspapers in the 18th century came to enjoy the reportorial freedom and indispensable function that they have retained to the present day.

The growing demand for newspapers owing to the spread of literacy and the introduction of steam and then electronic driven presses caused the daily circulation rise from the thousands to the hundreds of thousands and eventually to the millions.

Magazines which had started in the 17th century as learned Journals began to feature opinion forming articles on current affairs. The cost of large scale news gathering led to the formation of news agencies, Organizations that sold their international reporting to many different newspapers and magazines.
