Structural transformation in Southeast Asian countries and key drivers Bathla, Seema, D'Souza, Alwin, Joshi, Pramod Kumar, This study's objective is to examine the factors that have driven structural transformation ST in the Southeast Asian SEA economies and the policies supporting the process. It sets the stage by evaluating the ST in each country, quantifying the contribution of within sector and structural change to overall productivity growth and estimating the turning points TPs to gauge the prospects of income convergence. Eight SEA countries undergoing a steady rate of economic growth: Cambodia, Lao PDR, Myanmar, Viet Nam, Philippines, Malaysia, Indonesia, and Thailand. CLMVPMIT are chosen for analysis. We find their progress on ST to be consistent with the theory and historical patterns experienced in several developed and developing countries. However, progress is diverse across these countries and lags behind developed countries, indicating that labor is not exiting agriculture as fast as agriculture's share of value added has been declining. The ST has decreased from 49 percent in Thailand to almost 3 percent each in Cambodia and Malaysia during 1991 to 2016. Further, the contribution of within change to productivity, which was pivotal during the 1990s in each country, is rather subdued during the 2000s, thereby giving comparative primacy to structural change. A relatively higher 57 to 80 percent contribution of structural change in Cambodia and Lao PDR, together with productivity growth, may be explained by increasing migration and trade in nonagriculture products. We also find that while Lao PDR, Thailand, and Indonesia have reached their TPs, other nations, especially the poorer ones such as Viet Nam, Myanmar, and Philippines, are predicted to take at least a decade towards this goal. Empirical analysis suggests ST in CLMVPMIT is positively driven by agricultural productivity, terms of trade, and public investments in infrastructure, with little role for rural to urban migration and market integration. Large intersectoral productivity differentials across SEA countries, other than in Cambodia and Malaysia, necessitate accelerating agricultural productivity. disproportionate share of the labor force in agriculture through higher productivity
