Partial Equilibrium

Introduction

- While some of the indices that we have discussed are used ex ante, such as the complementarity index, the primary purpose of most indices is ex post evaluation.
- When we are faced with evaluating a policy that has not yet been implemented, we generally turn to simulation methods.
- This type of approach places a much stronger emphasis on the use of economic theory, alongside data, to generate policy information.
- The two main types of simulation models used in evaluating trade policy are partial and general equilibrium models.
- In the next set of sessions we will consider partial equilibrium models.
