

Experiment: The Isolation of R (+)- Limonene from Orange peel

I. Abstract:

In this experiment, steam distillation method was used to extract limonene from orange peel. It helps lower the limonene boiling point and allow the product to evaporate at lower temperature. There were new techniques and calculations being used in this experiment, including of polarimetry, enantiomeric excess, and optical rotation. The result turned out that the collected limonene had the experimental specific rotation of 116.7° . With the theoretical specific rotation of R(+)- Limonene was 125° , the percent of enantiomeric excess was 93.4%. Also, the results from IR spectrum and bromine absorption test were used to double check the purity of the product. IR spectrum showed the product had feature functional groups that represented the limonene. In the bromine absorption test, the bromine changed from orange color to colorless because of the existence of double bonds in the limonene.
