

Learning Objectives After studying this chapter, you should be able to identify the characteristics of life, explain the scientific method, describe the cell theory, explain the differences between prokaryotic and eukaryotic cells, and describe the structure and function of various organelles.

The Discovery of the Cell
Early Microscopes	Microscopes of the seventeenth century were made of glass lenses.	Microscopists that were making observations were using simple lenses that were not very powerful.
The First Biology	Microscopists at first thought the world of cells was like the world of living things and that there was no distinction between the two.	Microscopists soon discovered that different structures were visible under different microscopes.
Supporting the Cell
Light Microscopes	Light microscopes use light to illuminate specimens.	They cannot show cells in detail. Light microscopes are used to view large living organisms.
Electron Microscopes	Electron microscopes use beams of electrons instead of light.	Electron microscopes cannot see living cells, but they can show very small structures.
Transmission Electron Microscopes	Transmission electron microscopes use thin sections.	Electron microscopes can show the internal structure of cells.
Scanning Electron Microscopes	Scanning electron microscopes use beams of electrons.	Scanning electron microscopes can show the surface of cells.
Prokaryotes and Eukaryotes
Prokaryotes	Prokaryotes are simple cells.	They do not have their genetic material contained within a nucleus.
Eukaryotes	Eukaryotes are complex cells.	They do have their genetic material contained within a nucleus.
