SECTION 4 - THE ENDOCRINE SYSTEM

EXERCISE 4.1 HISTOLOGY OF THE ENDOCRINE GLANDS

Approximate Time for Completion: 1–2 hours

Introduction

This exercise is designed to introduce students to various selected glands of the endocrine system and to a variety of hormones produced by these glands. The endocrine system works closely with the nervous system to maintain homeostasis and therefore is very important in the physiology of all body systems. Students will benefit from early discussion of the embryonic derivation of glandular epithelium and from the procedures featuring the histological slides of representative endocrine glands. It should be emphasized that hormones can be secreted by other tissues of the body that are not included in this list of endocrine organs. Also, a discussion of the role of hormone receptors and target cell response might be appropriate at this time, using the microscopic anatomy to visualize the physiology.

Materials

1. Microscopes
2. Prepared slides

Textbook Correlations: Chapter 11 – Pituitary Gland; Adrenal Glands; Thyroid and Parathyroid Glands; Pancreas and Other Endocrine Glands

Clinical Investigation

1. Describe the microscopic structure of the thyroid gland and how hypertrophy and hyperplasia would affect this structure

Hypertrophy: increased cell size (which may result in increased organ size)

Hyperplasia: increased number of cells

Under the microscope, the thyroid cells would appear larger than the normal thyroid cells. The gross structure of the thyroid gland would appear swollen.
