Note: (i) Attempt all the five questions.

(ii) All questions carry equal marks.

(iii) Answer to question 1 and 2 in about 500 words each.

Q1. Define social change. What are the factors which promote social change?

Ans. The word 'change' immediately recalls something different from yesterday or past. Change is the irrefutable law of nature. It may be or may not be visible, but all things are changing at varying paces. There are changes in physical environment, flora and fauna, water table, so on and so forth. Similarly, social environment which has been created by human beings themselves is continuously in the process of change. A look into the history of society reveals that all social institutions such as family, religion, marriage, political, economic, social values and social attitudes have undergone a drastic change over a period. The social life being lived at present during the dawn of 21st century was not so about hundred or more years back. Permanence of human society is an illusion. Human society is in an ever-changing process, growing, decaying, renewing and adjusting itself to new-found ideas, inventions and ways of living.

Factors of Social Change

Physical Environment and Social Change: Physical environment is the most important phenomenon which influences social life. There are slow as well as fast changes in physical environment. Disasters in the form of storms, floods, earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, fire, seasonal variations etc. determine the form of social life. The prevalence of flora and fauna creates a social order based on it. Physical environment promotes and limits the growth of civilization. At poles and deserts, there will be a limited social life due to hostile climatic conditions for human living. The forces generated by the physical environment determine the form, growth and change in human society.

Demographic Factors of Social Change: Demography is the study of human population. 'Demos' is a Greek word which means people. Demographic factors that induce social change are fertility, mortality, migration, changing age structure, sex ratio, age at marriage, patterns of marriage, childbearing age, life expectancy, use of contraceptives, levels and types of morbidity. These factors have a far-reaching effect on society with the pressure to produce changes in social and political institutions. In the developed countries of the world, the population growth is negative or stable but in developing countries such as India it is alarmingly high. Both the trends cause social transformation.

Another demographic factor of social change especially with reference to Indian society is the declining sex ratio. In traditional Indian society, female infanticide was a known practice due to preference for male child. The girls were considered a negative property, a burden on the family. The situation has further deteriorated in modern India with the introduction of pre-birth tests. Sex determination tests are being misused to kill the female foetus. The misuse of these tests has spread like wildfire in Indian society despite the ban on it through Pre-Natal Diagnostic Techniques Act, 1994 (PNDT, 1994). Declining sex ratio will bring in disastrous demographic, social, economic and even political consequences. There will be more violence against women.

Technological Factors of Social Change: Technological changes have converted the world into a global village and produced profound social changes. Industry, agriculture, transportation,
