MORE BY AND ABOUT THIS AUTHOR

The devastating effects of the bombing of Japan described in Coerr's Sadako and the Thousand Paper Cranes are evoked here in the stirring story of Mieko, a gifted calligrapher and artist. After her hand is badly injured in the bombing, the frightened and embittered girl is sent to stay with her grandparents in the country. Mieko fears she has lost the fifth treasure, the "beauty in the heart" which holds the key to her artwork. At her new school, she is taunted by some cruel classmates, and the anger she feels only deepens her sense of misery and loss. Eventually, she is lifted from her dark state by the patience and wisdom of her comforting grandparents and through the friendship of Yoshi, a gentle classmate. Mieko's recovery is further aided by Yoshi's Aunt Hisako, a stern but generous woman who goads Mieko into picking up her brushes once more. (Hisako's disappearance from the story proves mildly confusing, leaving her more of a device than a fleshed-out character.) Overall, this is a sensitively and beautifully crafted story that juxtaposes the strength of Japanese art and philosophy with the complex emotional wake of the bombing. Once again, this author has created a vivid portrait of courage, drawn from a time that deserves to be remembered. Ages 7-11. (Apr.)

Charlotte's Web is a children's novel based on a story of a pig named Wilbur and a spider named Charlotte which was his close friend. Friendship is a moral virtue that should be treasured in every stage of life and so nobody feels good when they do not have a friend in the community. At the beginning of the novel, there is a small girl named Fern. Fern learns that her father intends to kill Wilbur because of the litter, but she begs her dad not to kill it by stating, "please don't kill it!" (White Garth, & Edith, 3-7). In return, her father does not kill the piglet but allows her to take care of the piglet so that she can learn a few lessons on how to conserve a piglet. Once the piglet is old, Fern's dad decides to sell it to her uncle who owns a farm. At the farm, Wilbur gets lonely since no farm animals would interact with him. Eventually, Wilbur hears a voice telling him that they can be friends and was surprised to learn that the voice came from a spider that seemed bloodthirsty. At first, Wilbur is horrified by the spider's bloodthirsty nature but later they become great friends. He learns that the spider's name was Charlotte.
