RESEARCH PAPER

The Rehabilitation Complexity Scale — extended version: detection of patients with highly complex needs

[1]Department of Palliative Care, Policy and Rehabilitation, King's College London School of Medicine, London, UK, [2]Regional Rehabilitation Unit, Northwick Park Hospital, Middlesex, UK, and [3]Imperial College School of Medicine, London, UK

Purpose: To describe the extended Rehabilitation Complexity Scale (RCS-E) and its factor structure, and to determine whether it provides added value over the RCS-version 2 to identify patients with highly complex rehabilitation needs. Method: A cohort analysis of prospectively-collected routine clinical data from 331 patients with complex neurological disabilities undergoing inpatient rehabilitation in a tertiary specialist neurorehabilitation unit in the UK. RCS-E and RCS-v2 scores were recorded in parallel by the multi-disciplinary team (MDT) at fortnightly intervals, alongside the Northwick Park nursing (NPDS) and therapy (NPTDA) dependency scales, capturing nursing care and therapy interventions in staff hours/week. Results: Very strong correlations were found between total RCS-v2 and RCS-E scores (ρ = 0.954); the RCS-E "Care & nursing" subscale and care/nursing hours/week (ρ = 0.838, p < 0.001); and the RCS-E "Therapy" subscale and total therapy hours/week (ρ = 0.697, p < 0.001). The RCS-E showed better discrimination for complex therapy needs than the RCS-v2, but not for complex care/nursing needs. The RCS-E factor structure was similar to the RCS-v2, with moderate internal consistency overall, separating into two distinct dimensions ("Nursing/medical care + Equipment" and "Therapy"). Conclusion: The RCS-E provides an equivalent measure of complexity to the RCS-v2, but offers added value in identifying patients with highly complex therapy and equipment needs.

Introduction

Assessing the complexity of rehabilitation needs presents a considerable challenge throughout the world. In the US, Canada, Australia, and many parts of Europe, classifications of rehabilitation complexity have relied on physical dependency (measured by the functional independence measure

Implications for Rehabilitation

- Assessing complexity of rehabilitation needs presents a challenge throughout the world.
- The Rehabilitaton Complexity Scales provide a simple measure of complexity of rehabilitation needs, which take account of basic care, specialist nursing, therapy and medical interventions.
- The extended version (RCS-E) presented here may offer a more sensitive tool for detecting patients with highly complex needs for therapy and equipment in specialist rehabilitation settings.

(FIM [1]) or Barthel index [2]) as a surrogate for rehabilitation needs [3,4]. Although these classifications may work reasonably well where patients are medically stable and physical independence is the main target of intervention, they do not capture needs for medical or specialist nursing care, nor do they specifically address the need for cognitive, behavioural or other psychological interventions.

The Rehabilitation Complexity Scale (RCS) was designed to provide a simple measure of the complexity of rehabilitation needs and/or interventions, which is timely to apply and takes account of basic care, specialist nursing, therapy and medical interventions. It has since undergone further development as a casemix tool in the UK. A preliminary exploration [5] of the RCS (version 1) demonstrated that it was simple and practical for routine use across a range of specialist rehabilitation services. In a multi–centre cross-sectional analysis, it showed clear differences between tertiary (or "complex specialized") and secondary (or "district specialist") rehabilitation services, on the basis of their relative proportions of complex cases (and the staffing levels to cope with them [5]). Clinicians reported favourably on utility, content and face value, and based on the feedback received, the instrument was revised
