Generally, for all equipment except your cylinder you can use regular scuba equipment with enriched air with up to 40% oxygen. However, local laws, standards or practices may require special fittings or cleanings; follow these if they apply. In any case, during servicing, oxygen compatible lubricants, as well as other materials, are generally recommended.

The potential hazards of improper enriched air filling procedures include (choose all that apply) -

CORRECT ANSWER -

The primary hazards are fire or explosion hazard due to high oxygen content coming in contact with combustible substances, and inaccuracies in the blend leading to uncertainty of what the final blend is. Nothing about blending would affect the potential for narcosis, nor likely affect the reliability of a scuba regulator.

The markings that, according to broadly accepted dive community practices, you should have on a scuba cylinder used for enriched air nitrox include (choose all that apply) - CORRECT ANSWER -

The minimum markings on an enriched air cylinder include all the markings required of an air cylinder, plus a band around the cylinder shoulder reading NITROX, ENRICHED AIR or the like. Yellow cylinders should have a 10 centimetre/4 inch green band. Non yellow cylinders should have a 15 centimetre/6 inch band. The top and bottom of this band should be a yellow, 2.5 cm/1 in. band, with the center 10 cm/4 in.
