

Prompt: Evaluate the methods and roles of leaders and organizations in the movement for independence change in the period between 1945 and 1975.

Between the mid-20th century's end of World War II in 1945 and the mid-1970s, the world witnessed profound shifts in political landscapes, particularly in the realm of decolonization. Prior to this period, European colonial empires held vast territories across Asia, Africa, and the Caribbean, exercising control through military might and economic exploitation. However, the post-war era ushered in a wave of movements for independence and change, challenging colonial rule and demanding self-determination. In this transformative period, the methods and roles of leaders and organizations in these movements evolved significantly, adapting to changing global dynamics and strategies for liberation. This essay will explore how the methods and roles of leaders and organizations in the movement for independence changed between 1945 and 1975, highlighting the innovative approaches and pivotal contributions that shaped the course of decolonization.

Document 1 emphasizes the value of religion in increasing cultural exchange. John of Monte Corvino, a Christian missionary from Europe, travels to the Great Khanate in an attempt to bring Christianity to the East. In his writing, John details his experience, noting how he invited the Grand Khan to adopt the Catholic faith. Though the Grand Khan denied his request, John was still able to create a church in the Great Khanate and baptize tens of thousands of individuals in the process. John's experience in the Great Khanate emphasizes the power of social factors, such as religion, in bringing new cultures to new areas and thus bringing the world closer together.

Similarly, in Document 2, Ibn Battuta tells of his stay in the kingdom of Mali and the cultural traditions he learned about during his visit. Ibn Battuta spares no detail, speaking of both the good and bad traditions in Mali that he observed. One of the aspects of Mali he enjoyed the most was their lack of oppression and the overall security of the country. Ibn Battuta appreciated Mali's friendliness towards travelers and foreigners due to their absence of oppression and heightened security. Because the country is open to outsiders, many foreigners bring their own cultures, religions, technologies, languages, and politics, all of which spread their influence throughout Mali. On the other hand, traditions Ibn Battuta disliked included the use of slave girls to bring men their food, completely uncovered. Knowing this could discourage other regions from trading or communicating with Mali, as other regions do not approve of such practices.

On the contrary, Document 3 details how political factors have decreased cultural exchange between regions from 1000 to 1400 AD. Anna Comnena, the daughter of Emperor Alexius of Byzantine, encounters the European Crusaders and details her experience with them. The exchange is distasteful, and the two armies are neither friendly nor do they have each other's best interests in mind. Comnena discusses how the Byzantine army fears the arrival of the Crusaders as they are known to steal money and are unstable. The encounter between the two armies proves how politics can affect how different cultures interact with one another, and how cultural exchange can be sabotaged by factors not even relating to culture.

Finally, Documents 4 and 5 discuss how economic factors increased cultural exchange between civilizations. The Khan of Cambaluc had dozens of trade routes between various provinces, and along these routes, he had stations known as caravanserais, equipped with luxury beds, goods, and horses for travelers. These stations were located roughly 25 to 30 miles apart along the routes. These horses
