Teaching Strategies

1. Let the students know that this course isn't only for project managers. It is also for anyone involved in working on a project.
2. Stress to them that what makes projects successful are the people involved. In order for the class to be successful they must actively be involved.
3. Encourage all students to participate by asking them to identify projects they have been involved in during their life.
4. For each project ask them what the objective was, what the constraints were, what the schedule was, and what resources were used.
5. Ask them if they can identify any project managers in the real world. If they get stuck, give them some time to think about the sports or music.
6. Ask your students to discuss something they did during the past summer or winter break, such as take a vacation, go to a concert, or watch a play.
7. Ask them how those activities relate to project management.
8. The Internet exercises in this chapter are very important. They involve the investigation of the Project Management Institute's website. Inform the class that since it was founded in 1969, the Project Management Institute (PMI) membership is approaching 500,000 members in nearly 250 countries and has about 250 chapters in more than 60 countries. The association has over 20 online communities of practice. Pennsylvania-based PMI is, by far, the leading nonprofit professional association in the area of project management. It establishes standards, sponsors seminars, develops educational programs, has a professional certification program, and publishes Project Management Journal and PM Network. It has an excellent website for project management. Students can have some fun with this site.

Lecture Notes

1. Real World Project Management Example

Visnets & Microsoft Culture for Project Success

Culture is a way of thinking that distinguishes one group of people from other groups of people. An organization's culture of innovation is the support for new ideas, risk, and failure. Behavior and attitudes are influenced by culture. Actions such as assertiveness, collectivism, or humane orientation can be defined for different cultures and influences how a project manager makes decisions related to managing a project and project team members.

- The story presented in this first vignette is based on a research study of project members in four countries: Austria, Canada, Finland, and South Korea. The characters are created based upon the findings of the study.
  - Many companies have offered professional development on understanding diversity and culture to learn about corporate innovation culture and its relationship with assertiveness, collectivism, and humane orientation.
  - Cross-cultural management can be influenced by managerial practices and other organizational factors. Innovation activities often include brainstorming programs, incentives for initiating new ideas, and monetary and nonmonetary rewards.
  - Companies with a high innovation culture also had members who showed high levels of analytical behaviors and a high problem-solving orientation.
