Rethinking the Sales Force: Redefining Selling to Create and Capture Customer Value
John DeVincentis, Neil Rackham, 1999-02-05
In today's markets, success no longer depends on communicating the value of products or services. It rests on the crucial ability to create value for customers. Sales forces need to retool current strategies by recognizing the customer's dominant power in today's economy and what that means for those who sell. Capitalizing on research into the practices of cutting edge companies, the author shows how the successful sales force breaks away from traditional thinking and transforms themselves into complex business processes with multiple sales approaches and selling models that meet the demands of today's sophisticated customers.

Sample Book Insights

1. When I presented the findings of my research to the V.P. of Sales, he was quick to point out that good questions are equally as important in sales as good closes. He explained that he had always stressed to new salespeople the importance of asking open-ended questions.
2. My colleagues and I had collected more compelling evidence against the traditional sales training methods. We had studied 35,000 sales transactions and we'd found that the techniques used by the company's top salespeople who were making high-value sales no longer relied on such techniques as objection handling and closing.
3. We could also convince Huthwaite that the companies he listed were teaching the traditional models of probing with open and closed questions, overcoming objections, and closing. We helped several companies replace their traditional sales training with new and more powerful training.
4. The traditional theories of selling suggest that the best way to sell is to find ways to relate to the buyer's personal interests and make initial benefit statements. However, our research shows that these methods are ineffective in larger sales.
