Fig. 8 Efficiency of Four Types of Spines

Extended Surfaces

Heat transfer from a surface can be increased by attaching fins or extended surfaces to increase the area available for heat transfer. A few common fin geometries are shown in Figures 5 to 8. Fins provide a large surface area in a low volume, thus lowering material costs for a given performance. To achieve optimum design, fins are generally located on the side of the heat exchanger with lower heat transfer coefficients (e.g., the air side of an air-to-water coil). Equipment with extended surfaces includes natural- and forced-convection coils and shell-and-tube evaporators and condensers. Fins are also used inside tubes in condensers and dry expansion evaporators.

Fin Efficiency. As heat flows from the root of a fin to its tip, temperature drops because of the fin material's thermal resistance. The temperature difference between the fin and surrounding fluid is therefore greater at the root than at the tip, causing a corresponding variation in heat flux. Therefore, increases in fin length result in proportionately less additional heat transfer. To account for this effect, fin efficiency ϕ is defined as the ratio of the actual heat transferred from the fin to the heat that would be transferred if the entire fin were at its root or base temperature:

$$\phi = \frac{q}{hA_s(T_b - T_a)} \tag{6}$$

where q is heat transfer rate into/out of the fin's root, T_a is temperature of the surrounding environment, T_b is temperature at fin root, and A_s is surface area of the fin. Fin efficiency is low for long or thin fins, or fins made of low-thermal-conductivity material. Fin efficiency decreases as the heat transfer coefficient increases because of increased heat flow. For natural convection in air-cooled condensers and evaporators, where the air-side h is low, fins can be fairly large and fabricated from low-conductivity materials such as steel instead of from copper or aluminum. For condensing and boiling, where large heat transfer coefficients are involved, fins must be very short for optimum use of material. Fin efficiencies for a few geometries are shown in Figures 5 to 8. Temperature distribution and fin efficiencies for various fin shapes are derived in most heat transfer texts.

Chen, 2025-09-26 Now in its 4th extended edition this completely revised and significantly expanded handbook addresses important new research findings and the global need for action related to climate change in its two most relevant aspects mitigation and adaptation There is a growing consensus that anthropogenic activities have been driving global climate change and the consequence will be catastrophic for civilization Reducing the 37.1 billion metric tons of CO₂ produced annually 2017 global emissions along with other greenhouse gases particularly methane has become a leading grand challenge and the pursuit of sustainable energy environments and economies is a complex issue affecting the daily life of every citizen In this 4th edition readers will find new chapters covering the causes and impacts of global warming the climate change impacts on health biodiversity and the economy and emerging technologies for climate change mitigation Particular attention is given to topics such as wildfire threats ocean acidification coral bleaching sea level rise and permafrost thaw The latest research on sustainable aviation fuels carbon mineralization and smart cities is also covered in this new edition as well as topics like sustainable building design climate resistant building materials and sustainable agriculture The Handbook of Climate Change Mitigation and Adaptation collates information in this multi disciplinary area providing readers with a comprehensive overview of the scientific background and current and emerging technologies Intended for an interdisciplinary global audience of researchers and decision makers at universities and in industry it covers climate change models established mature and promising future technologies and ideas the impact of climate change strategies for dealing with global warming the related political frameworks and climate education

Occurrence of Mold in a Two-story Wood-frame House Operated at Design Indoor Humidity Levels, 2009 Mold growth was observed in limited areas in a two story contemporary wood frame house during the seventh heating season of operation at or near design indoor humidity levels The house was in a cold climate Madison Wisconsin Humidity levels were estimated as being exceeded in one of 10 homes at this location Moderate amounts of window condensation were observed during each of the seven heating seasons Areas of observed mold growth were limited to the lower extremities of windows near the lower edge of glass panes and the edges of lower panels of a wood panel entry door that was not equipped with a storm door Mold growth was also present in sprayed on cellulose insulation in close proximity to the rim joist board in the basement although this mold was not visible unless the insulation was disturbed and was probably present during previous heating seasons Mold from these locations was cultured isolated and identified morphologically or by DNA sequence Seven genera of common ascomycetes and deuteromycetes were detected all of which are commonly associated with indoor air Penicillium was the most common genus with at least six different species The greatest variety of genera five occurred in samples taken from interior wood millwork

the edges of panels in the entry door and from a wood window sash Only two genera were found in a sample taken from the interface between the rim joist board and cellulose insulation Total spore counts taken in April revealed that on the first and second stories mold spores were less prevalent than in outdoor air but that mold spores were more prevalent in the basement than in outdoor air
