AUDIT PLANNING

CHAPTER 8: CLIENT EVALUATION & PLANNING THE AUDIT.

Review questions

8.11 List the steps performed by an auditor before accepting a new audit appointment.

The engagement partner shall be satisfied that appropriate procedures regarding the acceptance of a new client have been followed and conclusions documented (ISA(NZ) 220 para 12). The factors to consider in evaluating a prospective audit client are as follows:

- obtain and review available financial information on the prospective client;
- make inquiries of third parties, such as bankers, as to information which may influence the evaluation of the prospective client;
- communicate with the existing auditors with the view to evaluating the integrity of the client's management;
- identify circumstances that require special attention or that carry unusual risks;
- evaluate the audit firm's independence and whether the firm is able to properly serve the client;
- establish that acceptance of the client would not violate codes of professional ethics.

8.12 Identify applicable ethical considerations in accepting a new audit engagement.

Before accepting a new client the auditor should consider whether acceptance would create any threats to compliance with the fundamental principles (PSS-1).

Before accepting a new audit engagement an auditor should:

- evaluate whether there are circumstances that would compromise his or her independence such as the existence of personal or financial relationships with the proposed client or any conflict of interest between the auditor or any existing client and the proposed client;
- assess competence to perform the audit, especially the availability of the necessary expertise relative to the nature of the proposed audit clients business or scale of operations;
