Automotive Mechanics Crouse W H Staff,William Harry Crouse,1981 Automotive Mechanics Ed May,2000 The Automobile Hand-Book L. Elliott Brookes,2017-05-31 Excerpt from The Automobile Hand Book A Work of Practical Information for the Use of Owners Operators and Automobile Mechanics Acetylene A number of inconveniences are attached to the use of acetylene The problem of properly purifying it has yet to be solved Metallic compounds of sulphur phosphorus and nitrogen and free carbon are contained in the carbide and the gas has in it many impurities which endanger health when

burned in closed rooms The free carbon in the carbide gets into the burners in the form of fine dust and obstructs them A great annoyance is smoking of the lamps which takes place after two or three hours burning This is due to decomposition of the acetylene by the heated burner by which carbon is deposited in the narrow opening Many of the so called spontaneous explosions of this gas have without doubt been caused by high temperature in the generator see also Gas Lamps Acid Solutions The electrolyte or solution used in storage battery cells is made by pouring sulphuric acid into distilled water until the specific gravity becomes The solution becomes extremely warm and should not be used until its temperature is about 60 degrees About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
