

The Digestive System

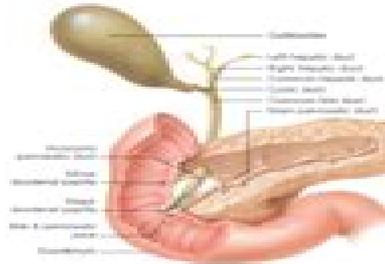

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a complex of organs in which foods, beverages, and other nutrients are broken down into smaller molecules that can be absorbed into the bloodstream. The process begins in the mouth, where food is chewed and mixed with saliva. The resulting bolus is then swallowed and moves down the esophagus into the stomach. In the stomach, food is further broken down and mixed with gastric juices. The resulting chyme then moves into the small intestine, where most of the digestion and absorption of nutrients occurs. The small intestine is divided into three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum. The large intestine, or colon, is the final part of the digestive system. It is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the remaining indigestible food matter. The waste is then moved to the rectum and expelled from the body through the anus.

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

The liver, pancreas, and gallbladder are accessory organs of the digestive system. The liver is the largest organ in the body and is responsible for producing bile, which is used to emulsify fats in the small intestine. The pancreas is a gland that produces pancreatic juice, which contains enzymes that help to break down carbohydrates, proteins, and fats. The gallbladder is a small sac that stores bile until it is needed for digestion.

Layers of large intestine

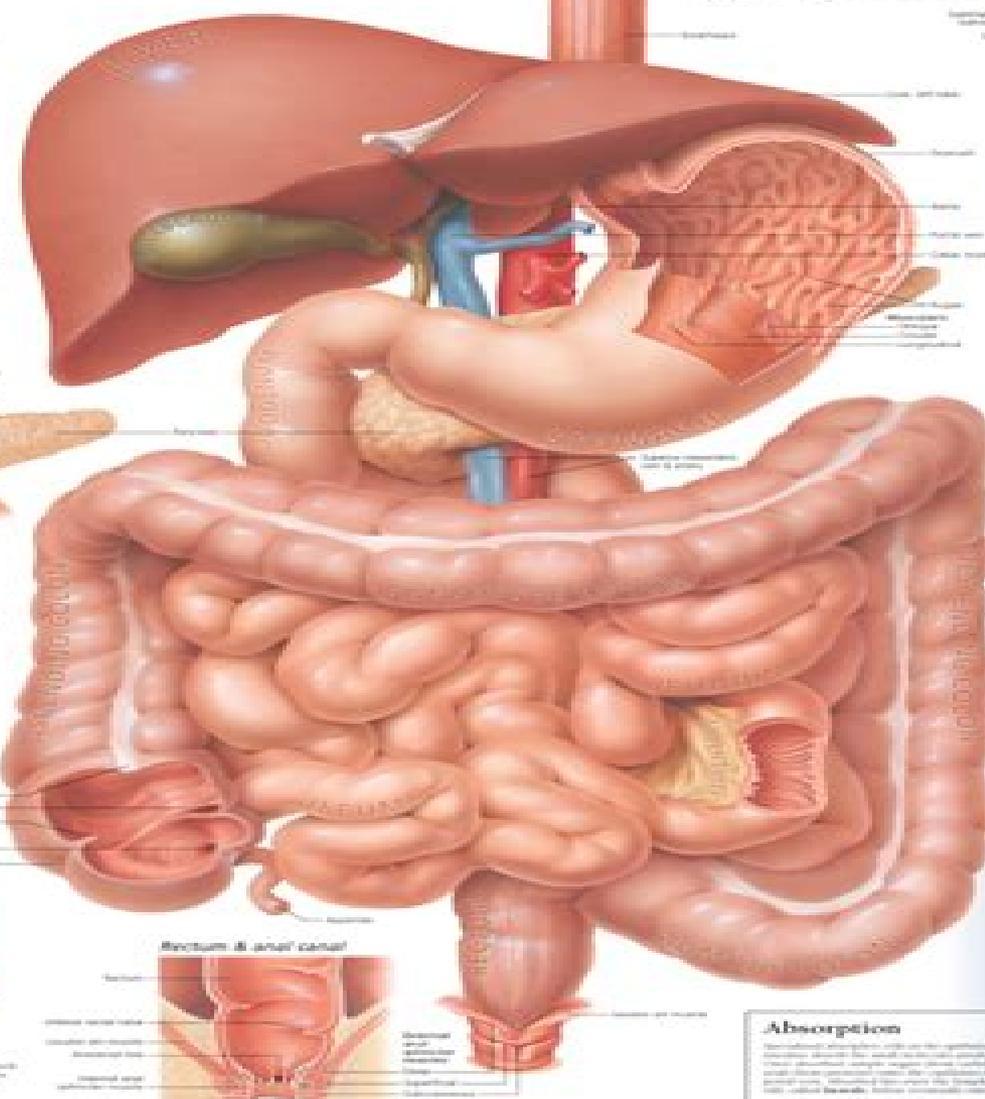

Large intestine

The large intestine is the final part of the digestive system. It is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the remaining indigestible food matter. The large intestine is divided into three parts: the cecum, the colon, and the rectum. The cecum is a large sac that receives chyme from the small intestine. The colon is a long tube that is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes. The rectum is the final part of the large intestine and is responsible for storing feces until it is ready to be expelled from the body.

Peristaltic action

Peristaltic action is the process by which the digestive system moves food through the tract. It is a series of involuntary contractions and relaxations of the muscles of the digestive tract that push food forward. The process begins in the esophagus and continues through the stomach and small intestine. The large intestine also uses peristaltic action to move feces toward the rectum.

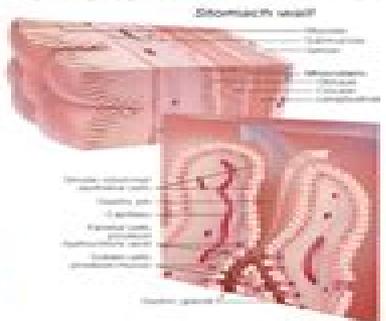

The mouth & salivary glands

The mouth is the starting point of the digestive system. It is where food is broken down into smaller pieces and mixed with saliva. The salivary glands, which are located in the mouth, produce saliva, which contains enzymes that help to break down carbohydrates. The mouth is also responsible for swallowing food and moving it down the esophagus.

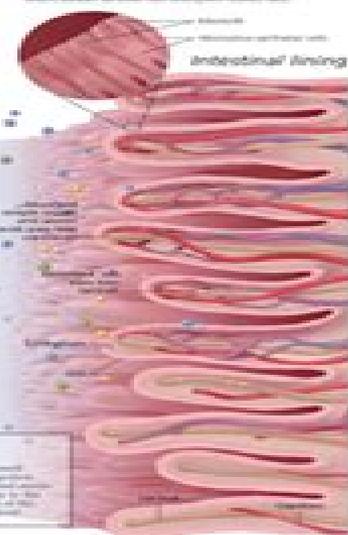

The stomach

The stomach is a muscular organ that is responsible for breaking down food into smaller pieces and mixing it with gastric juices. The stomach is divided into two parts: the fundus and the antrum. The fundus is the upper part of the stomach and is responsible for storing food. The antrum is the lower part of the stomach and is responsible for breaking down food into chyme. The stomach is also responsible for absorbing some nutrients, such as water and electrolytes.

Small intestine

The small intestine is the longest part of the digestive system. It is responsible for most of the digestion and absorption of nutrients. The small intestine is divided into three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum. The duodenum is the first part of the small intestine and is responsible for receiving chyme from the stomach. The jejunum is the middle part of the small intestine and is responsible for most of the digestion and absorption of nutrients. The ileum is the final part of the small intestine and is responsible for absorbing bile salts and vitamin B12.

Rectum & anal canal

Absorption

Absorption is the process by which nutrients are taken up by the cells of the digestive tract. It occurs in the small intestine and the large intestine. The nutrients are then transported to the liver and other parts of the body. The process of absorption is highly efficient and allows the body to obtain the nutrients it needs to function properly.
