Victoria Moreno-Arribas,Carmen Polo,2008-11-06 The aim of this book is to describe chemical and biochemical aspects of winemaking that are currently being researched The authors have selected the very best experts for each of the areas The first part of the book summarizes the most important aspects of winemaking technology and microbiology The second most extensive part deals with the different groups of compounds how these are modified during the various steps of the production process and how they affect the wine quality sensorial aspects and physiological activity etc The third section describes undesirable alterations of wines including those affecting quality and food safety Finally the treatment of data will be considered an aspect which has not yet been tackled in any other book on enology In this chapter the authors not only explain the tools available for analytical data processing but also indicate the most appropriate treatment to apply depending on the information required illustrating with examples throughout the chapter from enological literature The Fungi Used in Alcoholic Fermentation in Siam (Thailand) Viroon Suwanakitti,1950 On Fermentation Paul Schützenberger,1882 Technical Mycology: Eumycetic fermentation Franz Lafar,1903 Alcoholic Fermentation Jaspreet Banga,2017-11 Alcohol has become the social and cultural necessity in today s society though its role as part of diet is controversial The alcohol is formed as a by product of biochemical conversion of yeast on the sugars or carbohydrates of fruits A typical alcoholic fermentation involves conversion of sugars the most common substrate of fermentation to typically produced products like ethanol lactic acid carbon dioxide and hydrogen gas H₂ However more exotic compounds can be produced by fermentation which brings out the variation in the taste of the final product The history of alcohol fermentation is as old as human civilization Despite of being one of the most ancient fermentation processes known to mankind alcohol fermentation is also one of the most diverse processes bringing out variation in properties taste aroma and body of the product depending upon the changes in the fermentation process The quantitative and qualitative effects of substrate concentration yeast concentration and nutrient supplementation directly effects the ethanol content fermentation time and ethanol productivity Besides dietary contribution alcohol from cellulosic substrate is now widely used as renewable energy source This book is an effort to compile various studies of the alcohol fermentation process and the different substrates leading to differences in the final product A Dictionary of Chemistry and the Allied Branches of Other Sciences Henry Watts,1879 Transactions of the International medical congress.
