

TISSUES

Tissue

Tissue is a group or collection of similar or dissimilar cells that perform or help to perform a common function and have a common origin.

Differences between the tissues of plants and animals

S. No.	Plant tissues	Animal tissues
1.	Most of the plants remain fixed at one place (sedentary) and need less energy. Therefore the tissues are thick – walled and dead to provide mechanical support. E.g., Sclerenchyma.	Animals show active locomotion and hence need more energy. Therefore the tissues are made up of living cells. E.g. – Nervous tissue.
2.	Growth in plants is indefinite. Certain tissues (meristematic) in root and shoot apex divide throughout life and add new cells. These cells differentiate and stop dividing to form permanent tissues.	Growth in animals is definite. In other words, they do not possess dividing and non-dividing tissues. The animal organs grow more or less uniform.
3.	Plant tissues are not much complicated.	Animal tissues are much more complicated.
