

Stolen Day

by Elizabeth Anderson

"It must be that all children are sorry. The whole thing started with a boy on our street named Walter, who had inflammatory rheumatism. There's what they called it. He didn't have the germs yet."

But he wouldn't sleep. He would go flapping in the woods on the waterworks pond. There would always be a pond where in the spring the water comes tumbling over the dam and formed a deep pool. It was a good place. Sometimes you could get some good big ones there.

I went down that way on my way to school one spring morning. It was not at all strange, but I wanted to see if Walter was there.

He was, inflammatory rheumatism and all. There he was, sitting with a fish pole in his hands, but his legs were so weak down there all night.

It was then that my own legs began to hurt. My back too. I went on to school, but at the school time, I began to cry. I did it when the teacher, Sarah Suggs, he came out into the schoolhouse yard.

"My mother's got over the top."

"I got the answer," I said. I did, too.

I kept on crying and it wouldn't stop.

"You'd better go outside," she said.

So I went. I limped out of the schoolhouse street.

When I felt better, I could feel inflammatory rheumatism, pretty bad, but I could get along better.

I could have done some fishing on the way home.

"The father can say I had inflammatory rheumatism," I decided. "Maybe if you've got that you will too."

I thought I'd better go around to where Walter was and talk him about that, as I did - but he wasn't there.

"I may never see the father today," I thought.

I kept on feeling that, if I said I had inflammatory rheumatism, Walter's going to get his mother. Walter might laugh. There and laugh at me pretty often, but I didn't like it at all.

"Just the same," I said to myself. "I had got it." I began to hurt and suffer again.

I went home and sat on the front steps of our house. I sat there thinking that. There wasn't anyone at home but Walter and the man of the house. My mother had been there on five days and I'd kept her from home three.

It wasn't as if she was there. I had got tired sitting and was trying to get up. She was always so quiet, so slow little fellow.

He would have said something to that father for something else soon.
