Abstract: This article studies the phenomenon of affixal negation with focus on its categorization into two major types: direct (e.g. direct vs. indirect in English) and indirect (e.g. to understand vs. to misunderstand in English). It is observed that these two categories encompass the Aristotelian types of negation: contrary and contradictory. It is also observed that these two types are not mutually exclusive and their membership cannot be predicted a priori, although paraphrasing of the derivative could offer some help at times in this regard.

Ces deux catégories englobent les deux types aristotéliens de négation : « négation contraire » et « négation contradictoire ». Il est à noter que ces deux catégories (directe et indirecte) ne sont pas mutuellement exclusives. Il est difficile de dire a priori si un dérivé appartient à l'une ou l'autre des catégories, mais sa paraphrase pourrait y aider.

Antonymy, which is a part of lexical negation², is treated in the domain of lexicology and to some extent in

 2. The term "lexical negation" is used to indicate the negation of or at the level of a word. This includes antonymy as well as affixal negation. This does not include the negation of a verb with the help of not in English, ne ... pas in French, nicht
