

Producing Clones of Cells

APPLICATION Cloning is used to prepare many copies of a gene of interest for use in sequencing the gene, in producing its encoded protein, in gene therapy, or in basic research.

TECHNIQUE In this example, a human gene is inserted into a plasmid from E. coli. The plasmid contains the amp^r gene, which makes E. coli cells resistant to the antibiotic ampicillin. It also contains the lacZ gene, which encodes β -galactonidase. This enzyme hydrolyzes a molecular mimic of lactose (X-gal) to form a blue product. Only three plasmids and three human DNA fragments are shown, but millions of copies of the plasmid and a mixture of millions of different human DNA fragments would be present in the samples.
