

Chapter 06 - A Revolution, Indeed, 1774-1783

I. Introduction

The American Revolution required patriot leaders to establish a coalition in favor of independence, to gain foreign recognition, and to triumph over the British army.

II. Government by Congress and Committee

A. First Continental Congress

The Congress had to define its grievances and define a plan of resistance. A third goal—outlining constitutional relations with England—proved more troublesome.

B. Declaration of Rights and Grievances

Delegates declared that the colonies would obey bona fide acts of Parliament. Americans would not condone taxes in disguise, and Congress enacted a boycott of England and demanded nonexportation of American goods.

C. Committees of Observation

Congress called for the creation of committees of observation and inspection to enforce its economic proposals. These committees became de facto governments.

D. Provincial Conventions

By the early spring of 1775, many colonial governments collapsed in the face of patriot challenges to their authority.

III. Choosing Sides: Loyalists, African Americans, and Indians

ADVERTISING

A. Loyalists

About 20 percent of Americans recognized dangers in resistance and remained loyal to England. One thing that loyalists had in common was their opposition to men who became patriot leaders.
