Abstract: The sustainable development of urbanization is a necessary condition for China to realize modernization. Considering the importance of urbanization to China's future development and the advantages of development zones in promoting urbanization, it is necessary to quantify the impact of establishing development zones on urbanization development. Using the difference in difference (DID) model, this study takes the panel data of 235 cities in China from 1990 to 2017 to evaluate the policy effects of setting up development zones on urbanization from the perspectives of the population, land, and the economy. The results show that the development zone policy in the overall panel exerts a significant negative impact on land urbanization and a significant positive impact on economic urbanization but exerts no significant impact on population urbanization. The regression results of sub-regions show significant regional differences in the impact of development zones on urbanization. In the eastern region, the development zone policy has promoted the intensive use of urban construction land. For the central and western regions with weak development foundations, development zones play an important role in attracting the population and upgrading industries while reducing the intensive use of construction land. This study provides urban-level empirical evidence for evaluating the urbanization effects of development zone policies and puts forward policy recommendations for development zone construction to promote high-quality urbanization in China.

1. Introduction

The emergence of cities is a sign of human maturity and civilization [1]. After two centuries of unprecedented rapid urbanization, more than half of the world's population lives in cities [2]. Rapid urbanization has a profound impact on global sustainability while increasing social productivity. The research on urbanization began with the emergence of modern industrial cities and has drawn widespread concern from the academic community. Scholars believe that while urbanization promotes social modernization in various countries, it also brings a series of problems. For example, studies in London and New York found that state capital and planning play an essential role in urbanization [3]. In urban renewal, land value and rents have risen rapidly. However, ordinary citizens do not benefit from this, and the wealth gap problem becomes more significant through urbanization [4]. The rapid development of urbanization has also deepened environmental issues and aroused academic attention regarding healthy and ecological cities [5]. Schol-

China's Urbanization and Socioeconomic Impact Zongli Tang, 2017-06-26 This book examines the impacts of China's urbanization on the country's economic development, clan culture, rural societies, minority resident areas, natural environment, women, and public policy reforms. Drawing on official statistics, independent survey data, archives, and fieldwork research, it does so by adopting a cross-disciplinary perspective. The book places special emphasis on issues that have been neglected in prior studies and provides up-to-date information, reports, and analyses based on the latest events. Further, it considers future directions and strategies regarding urban development, discusses regional urbanization in selected poor and backward western provinces, analyzes changes in traditional clan culture brought on by urbanization, and explores evolutions in local clan societies in the Qin and Han Dynasties when cities expanded and business flourished. Lastly, the book examines the effects of infrastructure-related determinants on urban expansion rates and urban land prices, demonstrates the ebbs and flows of public opinion regarding various environmental issues, discusses planned real estate tax reform, and assesses the impact of demographic and socioeconomic changes on young unmarried women. The Rise of India and China Kala S Sridhar, Li Jingfeng, 2020-10-28 This book offers a comparative analysis of the rise of India and China and their decisive economic and social roles in a global context. It presents a cumulative picture of the socioeconomic challenges as well as the opportunities for growth and inclusive development before India and China. The volume analyses the performance of the two countries based on economic and human development indicators. It highlights the key achievements of the two countries in governance and financial growth and the potential for further economic development. Drawing on government data and empirical research, the book examines India and China's relative growth in trade investments, renewable energy technologies, urbanisation, and employment, and their policies on agriculture, land use, public health, and rural-urban inequality. Further, it discusses the shared challenges of inequality, poverty, gender disparity, and environment degradation which both countries face and contrasts their policy priorities and governance mechanisms. Comprehensive and insightful, this book will be of great interest for researchers and scholars of development studies, economics, international relations, comparative politics, sociology, public policy, and Asian studies. It will also be useful for think tanks, policy makers, and general readers interested in the India-China relationship.
