

- 1. Explain/Describe cytoplasm and the structure of cytoskeletal filaments.
 Cytoskeletal filaments are formed from globular proteins polymerized in head-to-tail arrangements. The formation of polymers involves complementary shapes. The monomers must interact when the surface of the polymerized molecule is exposed and must interact the next monomer when being produced. The complementary nature allows the binding with various polymers. Furthermore, all the monomers in the polymer must be able to interact with other monomers. Cytoskeletal filaments are composed of the most polymers, with varying their function. Some, although the majority, are the cytoskeleton. A small amount of filaments called the intermediate cytoskeletons are attached and change polymers, with different polymer for cytoskeletons and other types of cells.
- 2. Explain microtubules, microfilaments and intermediate filaments and how all are composed.
 Microtubules are composed of tubulin subunits, forming hollow tubes. Intermediate filaments are composed of fibrous proteins, forming rope-like structures. Microfilaments are composed of actin subunits, forming double-helical structures. The monomers of these filaments are different.
- 3. What are centrosomes?
 Centrosomes are cylindrical structures composed of microtubules.
- 4. Explain the origin, function and structure of the Golgi apparatus.
