ABSTRACT

This paper aims at giving an application of Analytical Hierarchy Process (AHP), a Multi Criteria Decision Making method for the selection of a motorcycle tire dismounting tool. Four criteria and four sub-criteria were identified for the selection of the best design concept from three alternative solutions. It was observed that a design concept-1 has received the highest score and selected design to proceed. The selection of the design concept is robust enough as the consistency on the decision made is within the allowable range of inconsistency which is less than 10%.

Keywords: AHP, design concept, concept selection.

INTRODUCTION

Concept selection is an activity in the product design process, where alternative concepts are compared and a decision is made to select the alternative(s) which proceed into the later phases of design [1]. Salonen and Perttala [2] described the concept selection as identifying the alternatives that best fulfill the decision-making criteria. Selection of design concepts is the essential and complex decision activity at the conceptual design stage as a poor design concept cannot be compensated by a well-detailed design and will incur a great redesign cost [3]. It influences all subsequent phases with regards to cost, quality, and performance of the end-product [4]. According to [5], the decision made at this stage contributes 80% to the production cost. Thus, that is the reason why concept selection is an area in design science that is under considerable interest continuously. The decision makers have to assess the design concepts in various aspects including the technical, cost, aesthetical, etc, normally with vague information about the design concept in hand. This may create difficulties for them to judge and it is a tedious activity. To ensure the selection of design concept is robust, the decision makers must certain with the decision of which design concept should they further developed.

To assist them in selecting the best design concept many different methods exist. The most common method is the selection charts. Possibly the simplest selection chart is a decisions matrix, where a number of design concepts are rated against a limited set of criteria, then each criterion is subjectively weighted, and the results are summed up to provide a total score for each solution [6]. Pugh's method, with extensions [7] assigns a datum solution and then all others are rated as better or worse on each product objective relative to the datum. Otto [8] extended this method by introducing numerical scoring procedures to assign degrees of better or worse with numbers that are weighted and summed. More complex methods such as the analytic hierarchy process (AHP) [9] use hierarchical groupings of criteria. AHP has been used in wide range of application including engineering, education, economic, etc [10]. Among these methods, the concept scoring and AHP methods are most commonly used in industry [2]. The strength of AHP method relies on the consistency index that determines the consistency of decision in solving the multi-criteria attribute thus reducing bias in decision-making [11]. In AHP, the problem is decomposed into hierarchies with the goal on the top hierarchy, followed by criteria and sub-criteria, and finally, the alternatives (in this case, the concepts) make up the bottom hierarchy. In order to achieve the goal, pairwise comparisons of all criteria are carried out to determine the relative importance of each criterion. Then pairwise comparisons are conducted between all alternatives separately for each criterion. Based on these comparisons an overall selection is made. Eigen values and Eigen vectors are used to ensure that the decision maker's judgments are consistent in nature. Several reports [12, 13] have published on the application of AHP by academia in choosing the best design concept. Basically, the successful factor in AHP implementation relies on experience and knowledge of decision makers in particular to determine the factors influencing the decision [14]. In this paper, the robust multi-criteria concept selection using AHP is presented in order to select the most promising design concept for motorcycle tire dismounting tool and demonstrates the certainty of the decision made.

OVERVIEW OF AHP DECISION-MAKING METHOD

Establishment of a structural Hierarchy [15]

A complex decision is decomposed into a hierarchy descending from an overall objective to several levels from criteria, sub-criteria to the lowest level. The overall goal of the decision is placed at the top level of the hierarchy. The criteria and the sub-criteria that contribute to the decision are represented at the intermediate levels. Finally, the alternative solutions are placed at the lowest level of the hierarchy. A hierarchy can be constructed by
