

What is cellular respiration?

All organisms require energy to power their cells.

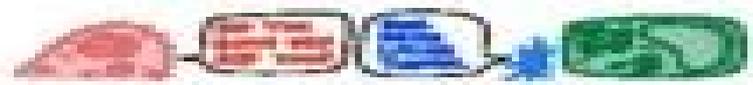

Remember: Passive transport does not require energy. Cells need energy for all other activities!

Cellular respiration is the process cells use to create energy (in the form of ATP)

Cells break down organic molecules (e.g. glucose) to create ATP energy

Autotrophs make their own food (glucose) but still need to break it down to make ATP

Heterotrophs eat organic material (they can't make their own food)

What is needed for aerobic cellular respiration?

Cellular respiration is the chemical equation for that

Think about what YOU breathe every day. How do you stay alive?

Glucose + Oxygen → Carbon Dioxide + Water + Energy

Why do cells make ATP?

ATP is a very energy dense molecule

Cells "pop off" the last phosphate to release the energy

ATP is composed of:

1. Adenine (nitrogenous base 'A')
2. Ribose (sugar base)
3. Phosphate groups (they pack very negatively charged)

Energy stored in the bonds of your food is used to add another phosphate group to ADP forming it into ATP

ADP = adenosine diphosphate (2 phosphates)

ATP = adenosine triphosphate (3 phosphates)

Why does ATP have so much energy?

ATP is a high potential energy

Its unbalanced way you must understand:

- negative charges (near) other negative charges
- phosphate is a very negatively charged functional group

Just like when the plates have lots of positive charges, they repel. This potential energy is what makes that bond so strong.

What is ATP used for?

ATP is the currency for the cell because every cell processes uses ATP to power its work

Anything that uses the energy from the cell, requires ATP (because life is energy energy is a bond)

Think about all the things you like to do for fun. Most of these require energy (directly or indirectly)

ATP is used for:

- Mechanical work = physically moving stuff. Ex: moving a molecule from one strand of a cell to another, muscle fiber movement, contraction (protein pulling itself)
- Transport work = transporting materials against a concentration gradient. Transporting large molecules across a membrane. Ex: transporting Na+ from an area of low concentration to high concentration
- Chemical work = building new molecules. Ex: polymerizing synthase of carbohydrates (polymers) from monomers

ATP has stored energy in its bonds. When ATP is used to power a process, the bonds are broken, and energy is released.

Active transport moves the molecule against the concentration gradient.

Respiration starts with glucose being broken down into pyruvate. This is an essential step of cellular respiration.
