

Executive summary

We compared the database performance and hardware cost of two servers in similar common enterprise configurations running eight virtual machines (VMs). On our tests of Microsoft® SQL Server® 2008 database orders per minute (OPM), the Dell™ PowerEdge™ R710 server delivered multiple advantages over the HP ProLiant DL380 G6 server.

KEY FINDINGS

The Dell PowerEdge R710 server delivered 20.5% better price-performance with eight VMs than the HP ProLiant DL380 G6 server.

The Dell PowerEdge R710 server delivered 19.2% better price/VM performance with eight VMs than the HP ProLiant DL380 G6 server.

What we tested

Our objective was to determine the server's database performance and price advantage while running multiple VMs. We allocated two vCPU to each VM, so we used a total of eight VMs for testing, as both systems under test had a total of 16 logical processors.

We conducted our testing using DVD Store Version 2 (DS2) to generate realistic e-commerce transactional streams where customers log in, browse, and order products from an online DVD store. DS2 is an open-source application with a back-end database component, a front-end Web application layer, and a driver layer that operates as the middle tier and actually executes the workload. We measure DS2 performance in terms of orders per minute (OPM), the workload's main reporting metric. The workload calculates OPM as the number of overall orders processed during each test, divided by the elapsed seconds multiplied by 60. We report the last OPM score the benchmark reported.
