Case Study about
RFID System
in Library Services

Structured Abstract

a. Purpose: The main purpose of this case study was to determine whether RFID system was useful for a library or not. In addition, it was purposed to explain the historical development of RFID, the components of it and the function of it in library.

b. Design: It was investigated whether RFID technology was useful for library services with a case study in a concept of qualitative research method. For the case study, Turkey was chosen as a sample by IRCICA library in Istanbul. Data were collected by the way of interview, archival data and observation, and then they were analysed according to their intended purpose.

c. Findings: It was seen that library needed only three basic components as tag, reader and software to work with RFID system. In library, the establishment cost of RFID system is comprehensible enough to adapt traditional library system into more technological one and tag's costs were not vairble costs for library because they were always stay in the library. Security system in library changed into more efficient system in IRCICA library after the RFID technology was set up. In this case, it was also found out that RFID system provide both time and staff savings for libraries in operation. It was seen that data base system of RFID technology could provide copyright informations, the information of the reader's profile to the library management. On the other hand, using RFID system in libraries can be beneficial also for readers. In IRCICA library, readers could easily find their book with a portable handheld reader wherever they were in the library. After a reader used a book and took a copy from it, another reader or same one could take a copy from the same book without any effort to look for the book at the library.

d. Research Limitation: Since being a case study in a quantitative method, this study provided information such as an exploratory research. Having included only one library(IRCICA library) as a sample was one of the limitations of this study.

e. Originality value: Due to being new technology, it is not been completely straightforward to research, purchase, implement and exploit RFID technology. There is a big gap both in literature and in practice about the application of RFID technology in libraries. It was thought that this study could contribute some useful knowledges about the usage of RFID system in libraries.
