Charles Bukowski was an alcoholic, a womanizer, a heroin addict, a loner, a philosopher, a drinker, and so on for most days, a poet. He's probably the last person on earth you would ever look to for life advice or expect to be a very good role model.

Which is why he's the perfect person to read.

Bukowski wanted to be a writer. But for decades his work was rejected by almost every magazine, newspaper, journal, agent, and publisher he submitted to. In the end, he finally got published. He kept going, kept writing, and as the stacks of rejection slips piled up, the weight of his failure pushed him down into an alcohol-fueled depression that would follow him for most of his life.

Bukowski had to stay put in a letter box in a post office to get paid his money and spent most of it on booze. He gambled away the rest in the meantime. At night, he would drink alone and sometimes hummer was playing on the radio up and down the street. When he'd wake up on the floor, having passed out the night before.

Many years went by like this, most of it a combination like of alcohol, drugs, gambling, and prostitution. Then, when Bukowski was fifty, after a lifetime of failure and self-hatred, an editor at a small independent publishing house took a strange interest in him. The editor couldn't offer Bukowski much money or much promise of sales, but he had a world of access that the drunk loner, so he decided to take a chance on him. It was the first year that Bukowski had ever gotten paid, he walked, probably the only one for weeks now get. Bukowski wrote back to the editor: "I have one of two choices: stay in the post office and gamble . . . or stop and face and stop all writing and never I have decided to write."

Years ago, the contract, Bukowski wrote his first novel in three weeks. It was called Women and Other Stories of the Suburban, to name "The Suburban" exactly.
