

ESCAPE from STATISTICS

LOCK: UNDERSTAND "MONEYBALL"

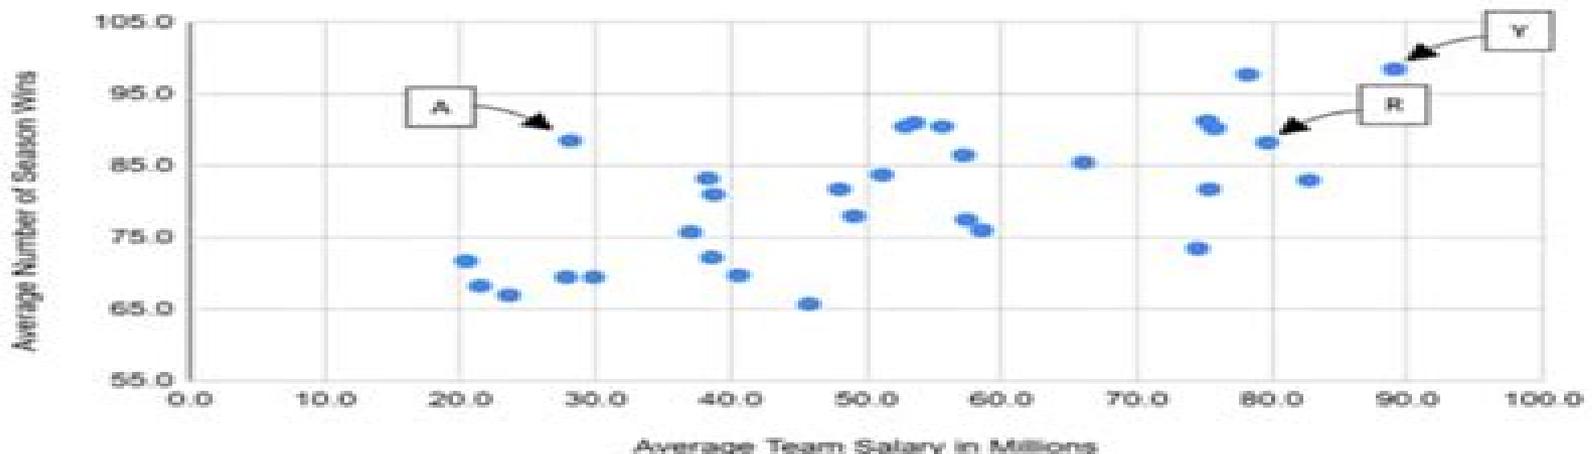

Using Statistics to create winning teams in major league sports

Inspired by: "The Story of Moneyball" by MIT OpenCourseWare on YouTube

The book by Michael Lewis, Moneyball, was published in 2003. The movie of the same name was released in 2011; it was nominated for 6 Oscars. The story is about the 2002 season of the major league baseball team, the Oakland A's. In the late 1990's the Oakland A's had a relatively small team budget – which meant they couldn't afford to sign the best players – but despite that they were having a lot of success winning from 1995 to 2001. Here is the problem: in 2002, the A's lost their star players in free agency to much wealthier teams (the New York Yankees and the Boston Red Sox). How could the team continue to win if they were unable to afford the salaries required to replace these star players? The managers of the team decided to use "sports analytics methods" to identify and hire less expensive but effective "undervalued players".

The team used Statistics to find these players... we will use Statistics to demonstrate how successful their methods were.

Consider the following graph: Major League Baseball Teams:
Avg. # of Wins vs. Avg. Salary in Millions, 1998-2001

What is the explanatory variable? Average team salary in millions, 1998 - 2001

What is the response variable? Average number of season wins, 1998 - 2001

Describe the correlation: Positive correlation; correlation appears to be moderate to strong

See the dot labeled Y above. What information does it convey? (= $90 million salary, = 98 wins per season)

See the dot labeled R above. What information does it convey? (= $80 million salary, = 88 wins per season)

See the dot labeled A above. What information does it convey, and why is this interesting? _____

(= $28 million salary, = 88 wins per season) — as many wins as the Red Sox but for much smaller salary cost!
