Abstract

This paper deals to present a systematic approach for the identification, analysis and control of existing buildings towards the health assessment of existing concrete buildings called as Structural Audit. The need of structural audit in the maintenance and repairs of existing structures where life has exceeded the age of 30 years, to avoid any collapse and save valuable human life. The concrete is widely used as construction material being inexpensive, easy for construction, applications and because of a high strength-to-weight ratio. More than ever, the construction industry is concerned with improving the social, economic and environmental performance of construction. In India, from 1980 onwards the infrastructure industry witnessed a rapid up of public investment and growth in infrastructure industry, which results in construction of new structures, specially apartments which are now in the age of thirty plus years. There are many buildings during the period and earlier have suffered through in due course of time because of structural deficiency, material deterioration, improper use, loadings or physical damage. It, further use of such deteriorated structure is considered a big challenge for the lives of occupants and surrounding structures. There is demand of appropriate actions and measures for all such building structures to improve its performance and assess the structural functions of structures which may leads to increase in lifespan life. The proposed structural auditing and diagnosis for health of existing buildings is three pronged approach for finding the present serviceability and structural stability of structures. The structural audit must be carried out following auditing norms, methods of non destructive testing and code provisions. The structural
