Discussion: Freedom of International Commerce

When Global Commerce first got off the ground, people in several places believed that the world was divided into spheres of influence. The concept of spheres of influence was especially important in the late 19th century, because of the competition among industrialized European powers for colonies in Asia and Africa.

During the 19th century, countries were competing to establish spheres of influence in Asia and Africa. People were interested in these areas because of the raw materials and labor that they could provide. Countries were also interested in these areas because of the strategic importance of the areas. Countries were also interested in these areas because of the potential for trade and investment.

In 1845, the first free trade agreement called the Morocco Treaty was signed between France and Morocco. This treaty gave France the right to trade with Morocco and to establish a consulate in Morocco. This treaty was the first of a series of treaties that gave France the right to trade with Morocco. The treaty also gave France the right to establish a consulate in Morocco. The treaty was the first of a series of treaties that gave France the right to trade with Morocco.
