

"Participants" is a level 3 header. Level 3 headers are typed in bold, indented, and have a period after them. The text comes right after the period. Words after the first word do not start with a capital letter.

Method

"Method" is a level 2 header. Level 2 headers have their own line, are fully left-aligned, and typed in bold. Each word starts with a capital letter.

Experiment 1

"Experiment 1" is a level 1 header. Level 1 headers have their own line, are centered, and typed in bold. Each word starts with a capital letter.

Participants. In this section, you describe the sample that was used. Make sure to explain who the participants were, how they were recruited, and how they were compensated and for how much of their time. Demographic information, such as the average age of participants, the minimum and maximum age of participants in the sample, sex or gender of participants (depending on what is most relevant for your experiment), and ethnicity are often reported. Follow the norm for your field of research.

Level 3 header, because Design is meant to be at the same level as Participants (within the Method)

Design. In this section, define the independent variables and dependent variables. For independent variables, make sure to indicate the conditions within the independent variable, or the range being used if your independent variable (sometimes called a predictor variable) is continuous. Indicate how the independent variables were manipulated, for example using a within-subjects design, between-subjects design, mixed design, factorial design, quasi-
