Chapter 2: Cell Structure and Function

pg. 70 - 107

2.2: Membrane Structure and Functions

pg. 81 – 86

The Fluid Mosaic Model

Fluid mosaic model – is the idea that a biological membrane consists of a fluid phospholipids bi-layer, in which proteins are embedded and float freely.

This model proposes that the membrane is not rigid with molecules locked in place, but phospholipid and protein molecules are free floating, fluid like, able to move laterally within the two layers.

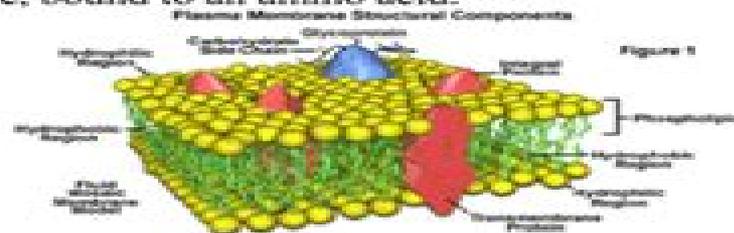

The phospholipid bi-layer in all biological membranes is fluid and is very important to the membrane function. The membrane is 10 nm thick.

The mosaic portion is the wide array of protein molecules found with the phospholipid bi-layer. These proteins are for cell to cell interaction, recognition, transport, and attachment. Some proteins have carbohydrates linked to them.

The cell membrane is responsible for regulating the movement of molecules into and out of the cell. The protein distribution is asymmetrical, that it is different on either side of the membrane

Glycolipid – is any membrane lipid that is bound to a carbohydrate.

Glycoprotein – is a membrane component that contains a sugar, or carbohydrate, bound to an amino acid.
