strategy for forging samples to fool the verifier into believing that a classical prover is quantum with a constant probability dependent on g . We also give a natural method for constructing random circuits with a particular value of g either $g=0$ or $g=1$. We use the classical forging strategy along with the construction methods to show that when g is small an adversary can extract s from just H and forge samples to fool the verifier with high probability. We give heuristic arguments for the validity of these attacks and demonstrate their success numerically. Sample Examination Questions Kansas.
