

Overview

In Chap. 6 we explained decision rules for investment decisions. We discussed financial investment evaluation methods such as NPV (net present value), IRR (internal rate of return), and payback period. The chapter subsequently showed that S (social) and E (environmental) factors can be valued in their own right and can be included in constrained, expanded, or integrated PVs (present values). However, in Chap. 6 the cash flows were presented as given. In this chapter, we dive deeper into the capital budgeting process, which is the process of making a list of investment projects to be done. We make these investment decisions more tangible by presenting more detailed calculation examples—including the calculation and forecasting of cash flows and their drivers.

We start by showing the steps in the capital budgeting process and then show how cash flows and incremental cash flows are calculated and forecasted. Subsequently, we identify behavioural challenges in the capital budgeting process, such as the tendency to continue poor projects for too long, to underestimate risk, and to overestimate cash flows. Even more challenging, people tend to extrapolate business as usual into the future, which is highly unrealistic in dealing with non-linear processes such as climate change.

Next, we integrate S and E in the capital budgeting process—integrated capital budgeting. The constrained, expanded, and integrated PVs (introduced in Chap. 6) are now shown with cash flow projections. It is shown that FV, SV, and EV can have shared, reinforcing, or conflicting underlying value drivers—and that the way and extent to which they are taken into account affect decisions.

The value dimensions FV, SV, and EV can affect each other. We discuss the process of internalisation, by which SV or EV might spill over into FV. Those investment decisions are put in the context of corporate objectives, as put forward in Chap. 3 on corporate governance. See Fig. 7.1 for an overview of the chapter.
