

Analysis of a Squirrel Gene Pool

Suppose that a gene pool of a species of squirrel is sampled every year. Assume that 1000 squirrels are sampled in each year. (Other species that are sampled are also treated this way.) Then the frequency of each allele is calculated as the number of squirrels having that allele divided by the total number of squirrels sampled. Suppose that the following data were obtained for the gene pool of a species of squirrel. The data are given in the following table.
