

But let's have a look at something a little more relevant to our billion-dollar app. At the beginning of 2014 Facebook had 1.23 billion active monthly users,<sup>5</sup> with an astounding 757 million logging in every day.

Facebook needs between 180,000 and 200,000 servers (the computers that run their website and apps) to support all those users, according to one professional estimate.<sup>6</sup> Think about what this costs to run. Well, according to one of Facebook's financial filings, it invested more than $1 billion so far in server hardware alone.<sup>7</sup>

But, if you think that number is big, wait for it. Google is spending a few billion dollars – every quarter – on supporting the computers it needs to run all its services.<sup>8</sup> In total it has spent over $21 billion on its data centres.<sup>9</sup>

So success is definitely about understanding – and managing – numbers at a billion-dollar scale.
