

RESPONSIBILITY ACCOUNTING
Chapter 12

I. CHARACTERISTICS OF RESPONSIBILITY ACCOUNTING

A. Definition.

- an accounting system that collects, summarizes, and reports accounting data relating to the responsibilities of individual managers.
- an accounting system which tracks and reports costs, expenses, revenues, and operational statistics by area of responsibility or organizational unit.
- the system provides information to evaluate each manager on revenue and expense items over which that manager has primary control (authority to influence).
- some reports contain only those items that are controllable by the responsibility manager.
- some reports contain both controllable and uncontrollable items:
  - in this case, controllable and uncontrollable items should be clearly separated.
- the identification of controllable items is a fundamental task in responsibility accounting and reporting.

B. Some Basic Requirements.

- to implement a responsibility accounting system, the business must be organized so that responsibility is assignable to individual managers.
- the various managers and their lines of responsibility should be fully defined.
- the organization chart is usually used as a basis for responsibility reporting.
- if clear lines of responsibility cannot be determined, it is very doubtful that responsibility accounting can be implemented effectively.
- while decision-making power may be delegated for many items, some decisions (related to particular revenues, expenses, costs or actions) may remain exclusively under the control of top management.
