General

This section will assist in understanding the principles, assumptions, and design criteria required for storm sewer design to assist in computer modeling and checking.

The Iowa DOT requires computerized modeling design using Geopak Desktop.

Design in Geopak Desktop is checked for many reasons including:

- Uniform use of design drainage binary components.
- Function of running and evaluating alternate design storms, scenarios, and criteria.
- Evaluation of flow regimes, flood calculations (generally agreed on design exceeding method), percent losses at structures and/or velocity changes within pipes. Test all flows are subcritical, super, critical, etc. Models can help determine where flow regime may be critical.
- Evaluation of the critical depth \(FDL\) and velocity conditions that are related to the previous information as well as other constraints.
- Function to plan preparation and reporting.

CADW: See Section 4A.22 and 4A.23 for instructions on setting pipe and drawing plot profiles.

Final spreadsheets and flood calculations are useful for design checks. However, due to the multiple iterations and flow required to be evaluated and the need to evaluate the FDL, spreadsheets and final calculations should not be used as design tools.

Storm sewer systems are designed after intake types, locations, and sizes have been identified. The designer should consider such items as (subarea) classification, storage tanks, load, and safety (risk) to the design system. Elements and discharges of storm sewers should be designed to take into consideration potential damage to adjacent and downstream properties.

Before beginning storm sewer design:

- Verify maximum structure capacities are not exceeded. Refer to Section 4A.6 for requirements.
- Fully understand economic and issues related to reducing flow (taking flow – including the consideration of bypass flow – from one drainage basin to another) or discharge to untreated drainage ways. Document reasons for doing so along with design considerations.
- Determine downstream existing conditions including Outlet Conditions, Inlet Conditions, Sewerline Location, Paved and Fluid Surfaces.
- Determine the existing and desired maximum high water elevation (MWE) at critical locations within the system. These locations may include intakes, or junctions where there is a change in the system. The design maximum MWE should not interfere with the scheduled function of any existing or desired water or hydrologic uses.

For pipes under railroads, contact Iowa DOT Office of Rail Transportation.

For loading stations or other urban connections to the storm sewer system, refer to 4A.20 design criteria.
