Abstract:

This article outlines a solution-focused approach to premarital counseling. Solution-focused premarital counseling is a strength-based approach that focuses on a couple's resources to develop a shared vision for the marriage. Background information about premarital counseling and solution-focused therapy provide the framework for the development of intervention strategies that are grounded in the solution-focused approach. Solution-oriented interventions include solution-oriented questions, providing feedback, and the Couple's Resource Map, an original intervention that is described in this article.

Article:

Numerous empirical studies have examined the effectiveness of premarital counseling (Carroll & Dougherty, 2003), and several manuals exist to guide practitioners in facilitating programs (e.g., Douglas, Ferrer, Humphries, Peacock, & Taylor, 2001). Although the research and practice of premarital counseling have been established, further attention to theoretical frameworks to guide premarital counseling is needed (Silliman & Schumm, 2000). In general, theoretical grounding provides a "framework for action" (May, 2001, p. 37), and theory helps to guide research and organize existing practical information (Rogers, 2001). Thus, increased theoretical support can enhance standards of practice and research in premarital counseling. We propose the solution-focused approach as a useful theory to inform the practice of premarital counseling. The solution-focused approach aims to help clients build solutions that will produce a more positive quality of life (DeJong & Berg, 1998; O'Connell, 1998). In premarital counseling, solution-focused interventions aim to help couples build stable, satisfying marriages. The purpose of this article is (a) to outline a solution-oriented theoretical framework for conducting premarital counseling, (b) to provide specific premarital counseling interventions based on a solution-focused framework, and (c) to explore the benefits and limitations of using a solution-focused approach in premarital counseling. Prior to outlining the solution-focused framework for premarital counseling, we describe premarital counseling and provide background information about the theoretical assumptions of solution-focused therapy (SFT).

PREMARITAL COUNSELING

Premarital counseling and/or education is a therapeutic couple intervention that occurs with couples who plans to marry. Premarital education is "a skills training procedure which aims at providing couples with information on ways to improve their relationship once they are married" (Senediak, 1990, p. 26). Typically, couples who participate in premarital counseling demonstrate overall positive psychological health (Stahmann, 2000) and do not have serious relationship problems (Senediak, 1990). Premarital counseling occurs in a wide range of settings and is provided by practitioners from a number of different professions (e.g., clergy, professional and lay counselors, community agency workers; Stahmann & Hiebert, 1997). Premarital counseling is a brief intervention, with programs averaging about 4 hours of contact time with each couple (Silliman & Schumm,
