

Engineering Survey CV203

BASIC CONCEPTS OF LAND SURVEYING

Excerpt from: Schofield, W. & Breach, M. (2007). Engineering Surveying (5th ed.). Oxford, UK: Butterworth-Heinemann.

1 DEFINITION

Surveying may be defined as the science of determining the position, in three dimensions, of natural and man-made features on or beneath the surface of the Earth. These features may be represented in analogue form as a contoured map, plan or chart, or in digital form such as a digital terrain model (DTM).

In engineering surveying, either or both of the above formats may be used for planning, design and construction of works, both on the surface and underground. At a later stage, surveying techniques are used for dimensional control or setting out of designed constructional elements and also for monitoring deformation movements.

In the first instance, surveying requires management and decision making in deciding the appropriate methods and instrumentation required to complete the task satisfactorily to the specified accuracy and within the time limits available. This initial process can only be properly executed after very careful and detailed reconnaissance of the area to be surveyed.

When the above logistics are complete, the field work - involving the capture and storage of field data - is carried out using instruments and techniques appropriate to the task in hand.

Processing the data is the next step in the operation. The majority, if not all, of the computation will be carried out with computing aids ranging from pocket calculator to personal computer. The methods adopted will depend upon the size and precision of the survey and the manner of its recording, whether in a field book or using a data logger. Data representation in analogue or digital form may now be carried out by conventional cartographic plotting or through a totally automated computer-based system leading to a paper- or screen-based plot. In engineering, the plan or DTM is used when planning and designing a construction project. The project may be a railway, highway, dam, bridge, or even a new town complex. No matter what the work is, or how complicated, it must be set out on the ground in its correct place and to its correct dimensions, within the tolerances specified. To this end, surveying procedures and instrumentation of varying precision and complexity are used depending on the project in hand.

Surveying is indispensable to the engineer when planning, designing and constructing a project, so all engineers should have a thorough understanding of the limits of accuracy possible in the construction and manufacturing processes. This knowledge, combined with an equal understanding of the limits and capabilities of surveying instrumentation and techniques, will enable the engineer to complete the project successfully in the most economical manner and in the shortest possible time.

2 PRINCIPLES

Every profession must be founded upon sound practice and in this engineering surveying is no different. Practice in turn must be based upon proven principles. This section is concerned with examining the principles of survey, describing their interrelationship and showing how they may be applied in practice. Most of the principles below have an application at all stages of a survey and it is an unwise and unprofessional surveyor who
