2.1 Concept of a Random Variable

An experiment is a process by which observations are obtained. Observations may then lead to two or more possible individual outcomes of a random experiment are called sample points. All possible outcomes together is set, which are known as the sample space.

Generally, we are not interested in the results associated with each sample point but only in some numbers associated with these points. For example, when a coin is tossed three times then there are $2^3 = 8$ possible outcomes and associated 8 sample points for this sample space are: (H, H, H), (H, H, T), (H, T, H), (H, T, T), (T, H, H), (T, H, T), (T, T, H), (T, T, T). If we are interested in the number of heads that fall then a numerical value of 0, 1, 2 or 3 will be assigned to each sample point. Thus a numerical quantity which varies depending on the outcome of an experiment or observed is known as a random variable or stochastic variable.

Thus, associating a number with each sample point of a sample space is usually called way of saying that we are defining a function over the points of a sample space, we have the following formal definition:

Definition

If S is a sample space with a probability measure and X is a real-valued function defined over the elements of S , then X is called a random variable (r.v.).

We shall use capital letter X or Y to denote a r.v. and lower case letters x or y to denote a value of the r.v. X or Y .
