

After Jackie and Oku leave, Tuyen goes to her parents' house, "intending to borrow some money from her mother" (57). Although she had hoped to avoid her father, he was uncharacteristically home rather than at the restaurant. As expected, he briefly criticizes her for leaving, but Tuyen knows "this was her father's way of welcoming her and saying that he loved her. Love for him meant a kind of gruff duty and care" (57). In their bantering, Tuyen accidentally reminds him of Quy, so he leaves, wounded.

Tuyen tries to convince herself that her father had understood that she didn't mean anything by her comment, then makes her way to her mother's room. Her mother is sleeping—both she and Tuyen's father suffer from insomnia. There is a photo of Quy on the night table, and Tuyen feels a pang of jealousy and resentment toward him. She briefly considers searching for more of her mother's letters inquiring about Quy but changes her mind and returns to the kitchen.

Chapter 6 Summary

After leaving Tuyen's, Jackie is searching for a cigarette when Oku catches up to her. Oku is desperate to overcome a dig he made about Reiner, concerned that Jackie feels more distant. Oku struggles perpetually to tell Jackie how he feels, and wonders if he does truly love her or if it was just "some fumbling sex between them, once" (70). Since that night, like Tuyen's art installations, Oku's "obtuse" (71) poetry frequently figures Jackie into it, but if she gets it, she doesn't show it and continues to seem uninterested in him. When he sees her, he apologizes for calling her boyfriend, Reiner, a "Nazi boy" (72). Jackie is uninterested in his apologies. She criticizes his feigned innocence, then steps onto a passing streetcar and disappears.

"Quy" Summary

Quy tells the reader that he understands that "[o]ther tragedies have overshadowed [his]" (74). He explains how "life at Pulau Bidong wasn't always unpleasant," as he "discovered small things about [himself], small pleasures" (74). He tells a story of a boy he met, with whom he would play on a rotten boat. One day the boy fell and was severely injured by the rotten wood on the boat; Quy believed the boy was lying, so he left him there. When he returned much later, the boy had died: "Then a bee flew out of his ear and stung me on the mouth" (75). Quy still believed that the boy was playing a trick on him and left him once again; it wasn't until years later that Quy figured out that "the fall had practically killed him and that [he'd] done the rest" (76).

Transnational Canadas Kit Dobson, 2009-08-04 Transnational Canadas marks the first sustained inquiry into the relationship between globalization and Canadian literature written in English Tracking developments in the literature and its study from the centennial period to the present it shows how current work in transnational studies can provide new insights for researchers and students Arguing first that the dichotomy of Canadian nationalism and globalization is no longer valid in today s economic climate Transnational Canadas explores the legacy of leftist nationalism in Canadian literature It examines the interventions of multicultural writing in the 1980s and 1990s investigating the cultural politics of the period and how they increasingly became part of Canada s state structure Under globalization the book concludes we need to understand new forms of subjectivity and mobility as sites for cultural politics and look beyond received notions of belonging and being An original contribution to the study of Canadian literature Transnational Canadas seeks to invigorate discussion by challenging students and researchers to understand the national and the global simultaneously to look at the politics of identity beyond the rubric of multiculturalism and to rethink the slippery notion of the political for the contemporary era
