

Chapter 17 Mechanical Waves and Sound

Summary

17.1 Mechanical Waves

☞ A mechanical wave is created when a source of energy causes a vibration to travel through a medium.

- A mechanical wave is a disturbance in matter that carries energy from one place to another.
- The material through which a wave travels is called a medium.

☞ The three main types of mechanical waves are transverse waves, longitudinal waves, and surface waves.

- A transverse wave causes the medium to vibrate at right angles to the direction in which the wave travels.
- The highest point above the rest position is the crest of a transverse wave.
- The lowest point below the rest position is the trough.
- A longitudinal wave causes the medium to vibrate parallel to the direction the wave travels.
- In a longitudinal wave, an area where the particles in a medium are spaced close together is called a compression.
- An area where the particles in a medium are spread out is called a rarefaction.
- A surface wave is a wave that travels along a surface separating two media.
- In a surface wave, particles of the medium move up and down, and back and forth. When these two motions are combined, the particles move in circles.

17.2 Properties of Mechanical Waves

☞ A wave's frequency equals the frequency of the vibrating source producing the wave.

- Any motion that repeats at regular time intervals is called periodic motion.
- The time required for one cycle, a complete motion that returns to its starting point, is called the period.
- Any periodic motion has a frequency, which is the number of complete cycles in a given time.
- Frequency is measured in cycles per second, or hertz (Hz).

☞ Increasing the frequency of a wave decreases its wavelength.

- Wavelength is the distance between a point on one wave and the same point on the next cycle of the wave.
