REVIEW OF LITERATURE

Literature search is a vital part of all research. There are several benefits of such a search. It provides a source of research ideas, gives an orientation to what is already known, helps to develop a conceptual framework, indicates as assessment of feasibility and provides information on the research approach to be used.

The aim of the study was to document the efforts now in progress i.e. Open access movement with sharp focus on Institutional repositories, which is one of the important means of achieving open access. The main objective of this study was to identify the wide range of practices involved in developing and managing an institutional repository and to investigate knowledge, practice and opinions about the IR among the users of the institutions having institutional repositories.

The present study examined institutional repositories developed in India from two perspectives: IR Development and Management; and Users of institutions having IR. Relevant literature on both aspects were consulted. Over the past five years, the implementation of IRs has been growing rapidly and the publications on IRs have flourished accordingly. Therefore this chapter is divided into three sections namely IR Development and Management, Users of institutions having IR and Institutional repository initiatives in India.

The section on IR Development and Management begins with Scholarly communication and then moves on to the specific areas of Institutional repositories. While the section on Users of institutions having IR begins with general studies on authors and then sheds light on specific areas such as Experience of IR, Contribution to IR and Opinion about IR.
