

Analyzing Qualitative Data

Qualitative approaches allow you to:

- explore and understand the context (social, economic, cultural, etc.)
- investigate perceptions, attitudes and experiences
- explore interactions between individuals / groups and a range of factors

Qualitative data analysis: A process in which the researcher moves from individual data units to an interpretation that helps explain and understand phenomenon

Step 1

Understand your approach

Inductive - identifies themes from the 'bottom up' and makes links between them

Deductive - starts with a theory or lens to explore the data and identify relevant themes

Step 2

What are you analyzing?

Experiences, attitudes, perceptions, Temporal dimension, histories, and how people see themselves and others. Why do people think that way? How did they come to that view?

Step 3

Arrange the data - step 1

Read your interview transcripts line-by-line. Identify 'codes' which capture the essence of what is being said. Look for significant statements and establish a coding list

Step 4

Arrange the data - step 2

Sort codes into categories - groups of data (or codes) that provide the building blocks of theory / explanation.

Step 5

Arrange the data - step 3

Identify main themes (super-ordinate) and subthemes (subordinate) which link related groups of data and help bring clarity and understanding

Step 6

Present your findings

Use a mix of narrative and visual presentation approaches including tables, graphical representations, network maps, matrices (etc.) and participant quotations. Explain the meaning of themes and relationships between the data

This is only a basic guide. Qualitative data analysis is a complex process and should follow the traditions of your selected methodology / researcher position. It should always lead you to being able to address your research question(s).
