Letter Burns for the Perfection of Paper —Martin Espada

As children, I scribbled when high school teachers set a printing press that manufactured legal pads:
the paper
displayed several feet high and leaning on a slanted counter
between the pages,
then brushed and grew up and down the stack, knights! knights required for the perfection of paper, something the water machine couldn't do. I had, the books would slide along, suddenly cheap paper, but gather like stones that the winds of the sea, hidden then the great winds of France roared and both sides turned at the perfection.

Two years later, in law school, I know that every legal pad was glued with the string of hidden cuts, that every open notebook was a part of the upturned and leaning.
